Grading rules

You can get up to:

- 1 point for results and discussion,
- 1 points for content,
- 1 points for style.

Results and discussion

To get a point for results and discussion, you need to provide reasonable results and justify/comment on them. If some results are not reasonable, or stand without comments, then you lose the point or get a fraction of it.

Content

To get a point for the content, you need to include the following fields.

- Title, name, date.
- Description of the task.
- A brief description of the methods, calculation routines and numerical models that you used.
(It must be absolutely clear as to how you actually obtained your results.)
- Results.
(You can describe your results in a graphical, tabular or text form, depending on the nature of the assignment. You need to specify all free parameters necessary to reproduce your results.)
- Discussion and conclusions.
(Here is where you justify and comment on your results.)

If any of the above content is missing then you lose the point or get a fraction of it.

Style

To get a point for style, the report must not have stylistic errors. The document “Acronyms to errors in technical reports” (on Canvas) contains a list of common stylistic errors in technical report. Study the document carefully and make sure your report is free of the errors in the list. You will lose 0.25 point for each error in your report (you can lose the whole point if you have 4 or more stylistic errors in the report).

Format of the report

Upload the report in a slide-show pdf format.

Missing the deadline

If you miss the deadline for the submission then I will grade the assignment report according to the standard rules, and I will multiply the number of your points by the factor 0.5.

Revisions

If you want, you can revise and re-submit your report, but I will grade it with rules for reports submitted after the deadline, so you can get max 1.5 points for it. So, if you got more than 1.5 points for your original report then you could not gain more with the re-submission. You can revise your report only once, and you have to notify me personally when you submit a revision (otherwise I would not be able to register it).
